Report of the Superintendent of Schools

Several changes have taken place in the Lawrence School System since the last report was issued. One of them was the appointment of a new Superintendent of Schools. The school system operated under the administrative direction of Mr. James A. Griffin, Acting Superintendent of Schools, until the middle of July when the new Superintendent assumed his responsibilities.

One of the problems with which the system was faced on the opening day of school in September was an unprecedented growth. The schools opened with approximately 450 additional pupils. As a result, additional space had to be provided. A floor of St. Rita's School building was rented in order to provide housing. Space, also, was required in South Lawrence where additional rooms were rented. It also necessitated the addition of 37 staff members.

Influx was primarily of non-English speaking pupils which in turn required a change of emphasis in a federally sponsored program. It now became important to work in the bi-lingual area. In the past, this program had been largely a remedial activity.

The system has been involved extensively in collective bargaining over the past year in all phases of its operation. With the increased use of federal funds, coupled with local budgetary provisions, the system was able to continue its development of better educational opportunities for the pupils in the city.

HIGH SCHOOL

Lawrence High School conducted several innovative activities during the year 1969. Four of the more noteworthy programs favorably received by both faculty and student body were: a charm course in the Business Department to enable girls to be thoroughly schooled in good grooming and rules for entering the business world. A junior Achievement Program in which juniors and seniors spend one night weekly planning the creation of products and the selling of stock. A student congress consisting of officers of all classes and representatives from each class to foster student participation, as an advisory group with administration. Student report cards and administrative records were computerized.

Also, at the annual exercises in recognition of students with high scholastic achievement, 31 seniors and 36 juniors were awarded "L" Pins for having attained an average of at least 89. This represented 8% of the classes. Career Day, held in April for juniors and seniors, scheduled 73 speakers from various fields of work including Industry, Business, the Armed Services, and colleges. Each student had the opportunity of hearing 2 speakers and were able to discuss opportunities in the different fields of endeavor. It might also be noteworthy that a high school senior was chosen to attend the Presidential Classroom in Washington with pupils from 550 other high schools.

ELEMENTARY

Miss Mary Walsh, Supervisor of Primary Grades, reports the following concerning programs in reading, writing, and innovative activities on the elementary level.

INSERVICE WORKSHOP IN READING

Dr. Mary A. Bradley, Professor of reading instruction at Salem State College, conducted a workshop for teachers K-3 which consisted of lectures, demonstration of reading lessons, exchanges of ideas and materials, and which culminated in the production of a handbook to serve as a guide in our system. A handbook of readiness skills and activities was developed by kindergarten teachers.

PERSONALIZED READING

A personalized Reading Program was introduced to stimulate in each student a desire to read and to let him progress at his own pace without being pushed by faster readers or held back by slower ones. Much time was spent in preparation before the program started and great demands in organization and record keeping are involved.

The usefulness of the Personalized Reading Program is dependent on well-defined purposes and values in operation and action, upon creative use of time, materials and suitable procedures, and upon critical appraisals and assessment.

Instead of relying on basal texts, many books are available so that each child may select the book or story he will read with the teacher's assistance when needed. A strong phonics program provides systematic growth in sight vocabulary and the skills of word analysis and interpretation of materials read. Basal readers are used in an incidental and supplementary manner.

PHONICS AND READING

Several pilot programs in reading and phonics were introduced in order to evaluate many new materials available. Among these was a phonics-oriented system which correlated reading, writing, spelling, and composition. The whole class approach is used with small segments of the lesson plans designed to be used with small groups who need extra practice and help with specific skills.

Two linguistic series were used and found challenging. In one the phonics program is more concentrated and moves faster. Stories are based on fables, folk tales, and imaginary episodes rather than focusing on day-to-day life of middle-class suburban families.

INNOVATIVE PROGRAMS

Progress was made in the non-grading of two of our schools, the Storrow and the Rollins. Continuous progress or non-gradedness may be defined as a philosophy of education which makes possible the adjusting of teaching and administrative procedures to meet the different social, mental, and physical capacities among children. It uses an organizational plan which eliminates grade labels, promotes flexible grouping and continuous progress, and permits the utilization of meaningful individual instruction.

In a non-graded school, organized by levels, a child can be placed at a level where he can be challenged and from which he can successfully make progress to the next level.

Each group is composed of children who are working well together and progressing approximately at the same rate. They have standards to reach and maintain but no time limits in which they must be met.

In order to establish and refine the checklist of skills for learning levels, the teachers of the Storrow School participated in four workshops during the month of October.

INSERVICE WORKSHOP IN CREATIVE WRITING

This inservice program for elementary teachers offered stimulating ideas and experiences. Materials were presented to help teachers develop techniques that free pupils to write their own stories with growing coherence and satisfaction. A film emphasized several techniques of shared learnings; pupils working in teams of five, each team guided by its own secretary; brainstorming to encourage each other's creative and imaginative thinking; and pupils working in pairs.

SPECIFIC LEARNING DISABILITIES PROGRAM

The Mental Health Center of Greater Lawrence terminated its educational service to children with learning disabilities. However, the Lawrence School Department acquired the services of a trained teacher in this area. All children in the first grade were given initial disability screening.

LAWLOR SCHOOL ABBOT CLUB

For two hours each week, eight students from Abbot Academy, Andover, participated in a tutorial program at the Lawlor School. Each tutor worked with the same two children for one hour under the guidance of the classroom teacher. The second hour was devoted to after school social activities consisting of games, crafts, drama, and a fieldtrip.

Each tutor had a minimum of two conferences during the year with the school principal to discuss the individual child and, when requested, teachers were available to give advice. Opportunity was provided for the tutors to observe instruction given by the classroom teacher and to receive direction pertaining to the academic needs of the students. The tutors then worked under their Abbot counsellor.

Each tutor kept a journal in which she reflected on her readings and tried to evaluate the progress of the pupils in the social and academic areas. While the scholastic progress was minimal, the delight of the children in the club activities and the interest of the tutors in each child provided a most rewarding experience for both groups.

FEDERAL PROGRAMS

TITLE I

The Title I Program for school year 69-70 was funded for $200,900. The aims were twofold: (1) To make a measurable improvement in the English speaking ability of the non-English student. (2) To improve the reading ability of target area children scoring two years below grade level in reading. The program functioned in the following schools: Breen, Bruce, Hennessey, Kane, Oliver, Tarbox, Wetherbee, Lawrence High School, St. Patrick's, St. Mary's, St. Anne's, St. Augustine's, Holy Trinity and Holy Rosary. In total 1,000 children were serviced by a 28 member staff.

ADULT BASIC EDUCATION

The Adult Basic Education Program organized to assist persons over 16 who had not completed grammar school was expanded to include non-English speaking adults. Five centers were utilized: Oliver School, Spanish Center, Hancock Project, St. Anne's School and the Lawrence County Jail.

The 2½ hour classes were held two nights a week for 30 weeks. 225 adults enrolled in the project and were taught by 8 teachers and 6 aides. The program, financed on a Federal Budget of $14,000 issued 6 diplomas to native born pupils and over 200 certificates to other participants.
